Problem

A federally funded renovation project at a military base in Minnesota involved converting former barracks built in the 1960s into modern office space. The existing plumbing infrastructure was outdated and did not meet current building, ADA, or federal standards. As part of the remodel, additional bathrooms were added, further increasing compliance requirements.

Because this was a government funded project, Buy America Build America (BABA) compliance and domestic content requirements were mandatory. Any non-compliant materials posed a risk to project funding, making product selection especially critical.

Solution

Josam was selected to support the project with a range of domestically compliant plumbing products that met BABA requirements. Installed products included floor drains, carriers, and cleanouts, all specified to help bring the renovated buildings up to modern code and compliance standards.

Having multiple compliant product categories available from a single manufacturer simplified selection for the contractor and reduced the risk of inadvertently specifying noncompliant components. Josam's broad product offering, combined with reliable inventory availability, allowed the team to maintain compliance while keeping the project moving on schedule.

Results

Josam's products performed as intended during installation and met all required compliance standards. The renovation team was able to upgrade aging infrastructure efficiently while maintaining confidence that the project remained fully compliant. This reduced risk for a high-standard government project where noncompliance could impact funding. Based on product availability, ease of specification, and confidence in compliance, Josam was identified as the right fit for this military renovation project.
